

Did I miss the announcement of the "ways to make flying even more unendurable" competition? It's not enough that I'm groped by TSA to see if my bra is going to explode, forced into a kindergarten-sized seat, have a bag of pretzels thrown at me, and lose my luggage. Now I have to listen to some self-important jerk yammering on for six hours about nothing? What purpose does this serve? Those few people who are truly so important they can't be out of touch for a few hours have their own planes. They're not in coach, or even in business class. And on a safety note, if the FAA isn't 100% supportive, this change shouldn't even be considered. I don't want to die because someone just HAD to use his cellphone. This is a bad, bad, BAD idea. And did I mention this was a bad idea?